WHO REPRESENTS US

Women of the 116th Congress
In January, when the new Congress convened, more than 120 women took the oath of office, the most ever. That’s more than twice as many women elected in 1992, dubbed “the year of the woman.” Included in this record number of women are some who have made history such as the first Muslims, the first Native Americans, and the first female Senators to represent Tennessee and Arizona. Although Congress has never seen this many women seated at one time, we are not likely to see this group unite around a central set of “women’s issues.” Issues often associated with women — equal pay, child care, sexual assault, domestic violence, paid family leave, and reproductive rights — are, of course, areas where female lawmakers remain crucial to the debate. “Every issue is a woman’s issue,” says Virginia Foxx, a House Republican from western North Carolina in an interview with CQ Magazine. “So I’m sure if you talk to my colleagues that most of them would tell you that.”

This publication is a look by GFWC at the women serving in the 116th Congress. Take a look inside for profiles and more!

The Speaker of the House is the most significant role in the U.S. House of Representatives. This person is elected by the majority party to lead the House. The speaker presides over debate, appoints members of select and conference committees, establishes the legislative agenda, maintains order within the House, and administers the oath of office to House members. The individual in this office is second in the line of presidential succession, following the vice president. The United States has seen fifty-four individuals hold the speaker’s gavel, but only one has been a woman. In January of 2019, Nancy P. Pelosi was elected to the position of Speaker for the second time, continuing her legacy as the only woman to hold this position and the highest ranking elected woman in United States history.

First elected to the House in 1987, Nancy Pelosi worked her way up through Democratic Party ranks and was elected House Minority Leader in 2002, becoming the first woman to lead a major party in the House. Pelosi was born in Baltimore, Maryland, the youngest, and only girl of seven children to a family with Italian roots. While still a young child, Nancy’s father served as Mayor of Baltimore. Pelosi’s mother was also active in politics, organizing women, and teaching her daughter the value of networking.
